I. INTRODUCTION

This report is a final report on the Maine Criminal Justice Planning and Assistance Agency (MCJPAA) and is intended to summarize and review its major activities. The information contained herein was obtained from the remaining records of the MCJPAA, State Archives, various other state and federal agencies, and from information generously provided by former staff and board members.

The MCJPAA administered the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA) program in Maine, and its impact on Maine's criminal justice system was profound. The MCJPAA came into being in late 1968 and terminated in December 1983. Many people believe the programs funded by the MCJPAA over its 15-year history brought Maine's criminal justice system "out of the dark ages" and propelled it into the twentieth century. This report will, very briefly, highlight some of these programs and provide some basic information about the MCJPAA and about the LEAA nationally.

While it is impossible to recognize everyone who has made major contributions to Maine's criminal justice system, it is appropriate to mention several outstanding professionals. The first is Jack Leet, MCJPAA's first Executive Director. Jack was responsible for the "grass roots" planning process which encouraged and ensured input from all elements of the system. Next is T. T. (Ted) Trott, Jr., MCJPAA's second Executive Director. Ted was most responsible for Maine's outstanding voice communications network. Third is Maurice Harvey, Executive Director of Maine's Criminal Justice Academy, who worked diligently to improve Maine's criminal justice training capability and should be commended for his efforts on curriculum validation. Finally, Chief Francis Woodhead of Bangor, a leader in the fight against illegal drug activities, was the most instrumental in securing funds for, and the strongest advocate of, projects such as the Division of Special Investigation and who, more than any other subgrant recipient, unselfishly shared the MCJPAA funded resources his department received. These individuals should be commended for their contribution to the MCJPAA program and to Maine's criminal justice system.

More than any one factor, the ingredient which made the MCJPAA program a success was the people who were involved. Members of the Board of Directors served without pay and many worked hundreds of hours to improve Maine's criminal justice system. Those members who chaired committees, those who served on the Executive and Grants Committees, in particular, and the Chairmen of the Board devoted untold hours to the MCJPAA. Many dedicated staff members worked long and hard, as did many of the professionals in the system, in making a large contribution toward MCJPAA's success.

II. HISTORY

A. LEAA

The Law Enforcement Assistance Administration was the federal agency which administered the criminal justice improvements program authorized by the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 and its subsequent amendments. The Act was primarily in response to the riots and unrest in several major U.S. cities in the mid and late 1960's. While originally drafted to provide financial assistance for only law enforcement agencies in the major metropolitan areas, the final legislation established a "governor's program" in each state and territory for all elements of the criminal justice system at the state and local levels. The program was primarily a block grant program directed at providing financial and technical assistance, but it also included a discretionary (categorical) program controlled and administered by LEAA. It established a federal structure, within the Department of Justice, which included a research and development bureau, a statistical bureau and the LEAA itself. The basic philosophy of the block grant program was that professionals at the state and local levels understood their crime and systemic problems better than people living in Washington, D.C. and could develop and implement the most appropriate solutions to those problems. Thus, a sum (block) of money was available for each state (distributed on a population basis) to make improvements in its criminal justice system and to develop programs which would reduce the incident crime. The states, however, had to meet numerous legislative requirements before they could receive funds. Each state had to establish a state agency to administer the program, form a board of directors, submit an annual, comprehensive criminal justice plan and develop a program budget. The federal program lasted about thirteen years and the federal legislation was reauthorized and amended several times as shown below:

Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968:	5 years
Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 as amended 1973:	3 years
Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 as amended 1976:	3 years
Justice Systems Improvement Act of 1979:	2 years

Each reauthorization included more administrative requirements until the nature of the program resembled a categorical (as opposed to a block grant) program. In addition to statutory requirements, the LEAA promulgated rules and regulations which further increased the state's administrative burden.

LEAA's central office was in Washington, D.C., and there were ten regional offices across the country. Maine was part of the New England Region which was headquartered in Boston, Massachusetts. In 1977, Attorney General Griffin Bell ordered all federal regional offices closed and the program was administered from Washington, D.C. subsequent to that time.

While LEAA developed many outstanding programs, it also received some unjustified criticism at the national level and acquired an unfortunate reputation as somewhat of a wasteful bureaucracy. Perhaps the biggest shortcoming LEAA had was its lack of consistent leadership. In its 13-year history, LEAA had no less than nine chief administrators and had several periods with "acting" administrators. Federal priorities and goals changed with each administrator, and concepts such as evaluation, technical assistance, capacity building, etc., came and went with regularity.

In 1980, President Carter eliminated LEAA from his budget request, and Congress eventually agreed. During the next three years, many attempts were made to restore funding, but each failed, and in April 1982, LEAA (as a federal entity) ended.

B. MCJPAA

The MCJPAA was first established by Executive Order (Governor Kenneth Curtis) in November 1968 and subsequently by legislation (5 M.R.S.A., Part 9, Chapter 315) in 1969. It was established in response to federal legislation for the sole purpose of administering the LEAA program. The Agency was responsible for planning, financial accountability, subgrant administration and, in general, for ensuring compliance with the requirements of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act and its subsequent amendments. Organizationally, it was located in the Executive Department and was authorized to accept and disburse federal, state and other (special revenue) funds consistent with the intent of the its program (i.e., for criminal justice purposes).

The MCJPAA had a Board of Directors (appointed by the Governor) which represented all elements of the criminal justice system (i.e., police, courts - including prosecution and defense; corrections and juvenile justice) at the state, county and municipal levels. The Board had a broad geographic representation and included interested citizens as well as criminal justice professionals. The Board, until funding ceased, generally met monthly to act on subgrant requests, set policy, participate in planning activities and conduct other business. It also hired an Executive Director who, in turn, hired such other staff as necessary to conduct the business of the Agency.

There were several subcommittees of the Board, including an Executive Committee, Grants Committee and functional (police, courts, corrections and juvenile justice) planning committees. The Executive Committee was responsible for the operations of the Agency. It met monthly and also had the final task of overseeing the phaseout of the MCJPAA. The Grants Committee generally met prior to each Board meeting to review subgrant requests and to develop funding recommendations for the full board. The planning committees met as needed during the planning process and occasionally, as requested, to review specific applications or develop funding policy recommendations. Appendix I is a list of known board members.

One of the MCJPAA's greatest strengths was the quality of its staff and, unlike LEAA, the consistency of its leadership. The Board had only four chairmen:

Dana Baggett	October 1969 - July 1971
Harry Glassman	July 1971 - January 1972
Richard Cohen	February 1972 - January 1979
David Cox	February 1979 - December 1983

The Agency had only three Executive Directors in its history:

John B. Leet	November 1968 - December 1977
Theodore T. Trott, Jr.	January 1977 - September 1979
Richard E. Perkins	October 1979 - December 1983

Appendix II is a list of all known MCJPAA staff, the position(s) they held and their approximate time of service.

Equally as important as the staff and the leadership was the "grass roots" planning process which continued to the end of the program. The MCJPAA established local planning committees and staffed them by providing planning grants to seven regional planning commissions. Initial planning efforts were somewhat unsophisticated, but the process was sound and it evolved steadily. The following is a description of that process:

MCJPAA's planning process was dependent on four groups: the regional criminal justice coordinators and their county and regional criminal justice committees, who provided the local perspective; state agency planners, who identified needs within their own agencies; MCJPAA functional specialists, who provided a statewide, inter-agency approach, assisted by crime analysis and other specialized analyses of data produced by the State Data Analysis Center; and the functional committees of MCJPAA's Board of Directors, which reviewed the products supplied by all of the previously identified contributors and recommended to the Board of Directors, for its approval, proposed activities and funding allocations.

At the regional level, seven criminal justice coordinators contracted to provide, among other services, planning documents for consideration in the development of the comprehensive state plan. These documents were based on a local analysis of crime and the needs of local criminal justice agencies. They identified problems, and proposed and prioritized activities to remediate the problems described.

A planner (or other staff) for each of the state criminal justice agencies, (i.e., the Courts, the Department of the Attorney General, the Department of Corrections, and the Department of Public Safety), analyzed current agency operations and proposed activities to ameliorate identified problems. Priorities among the activities were set, in the usual case, by the chief executive of the agency.

Both the regions and the state agencies submitted the products of their planning efforts to MCJPAA where functional area specialists reviewed, synopsized and incorporated them as components of a statewide assessment of the status and needs of Maine's criminal justice system.

Each MCJPAA functional specialist analyzed, from a statewide perspective, the area of the justice system which was his/her speciality, identified systemic problems and developed strategies to address identified deficiencies. Thereafter, the specialist prepared synopses of his/her own analysis and remediation strategy and those of the regions and the State agencies. All were presented to the functional subcommittees, which reviewed and revised, as necessary, the characterization of problems and proposed strategies, and ultimately, recommended priorities for proposed activities and funding allocations necessary to support those activities, to the Board of Directors.

The activities and allocations, endorsed by the functional committees, were the basis for the state application for LEAA Funding. The application plan was then approved by the Board of Directors and was used as the outline for system improvement for the period it encompassed.

Also noteworthy is the computerized Grants Management System (GMIS) developed by the MCJPAA. This system has enabled Maine to maintain fiscal accountability and to become only the second state to balance its fiscal records with the Department of Justice and to formally close its activities with Washington.

Finally, it is important to point out that the MCJPAA went beyond the traditional role of a planning agency. The MCJPAA staff developed and administered some major programs such as the Standards and Goals Project, the State Data Analysis Center and the statewide radio system, as well as assisted in numerous other programs such as data processing projects for several state and local agencies. MCJPAA staff were providing technical assistance to operating agencies long before it was fashionable to do so.

C. JJDPAA

In 1974, Congress passed the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act which established the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention within the Department of Justice, and amended the Safe Streets Act to include additional requirements and block grant funds for the sole purpose of developing and funding juvenile programs. MCJPAA used the JJDP funds to supplement its ongoing, excellent, juvenile justice improvement activities initiated by the MCJPAA Board of Directors and for other activities consistent with the intent of that legislation. The Act required each state to establish a State Advisory Group (SAG) for juvenile justice issues. Maine's SAG, the Juvenile Justice Advisory Group (JJAG), functioned in an advisory capacity only, made funding recommendations to the MCJPAA Board of Directors, and assisted in planning. The JJAG also served, for a short period of time, as the juvenile functional subcommittee of the MCJPAA Board of Directors. The MCJPAA administered this program until it was transferred to Maine's Department of Corrections in July 1982 where it continues today.

III. MAJOR ACCOMPLISHMENTS/ACTIVITIES

A. TRAINING AND EDUCATION

From its inception in 1968, the MCJPAA and its Board of Directors placed a high priority on addressing the training and education needs of Maine's criminal justice system. It is important to emphasize that all elements of the criminal justice system were included in MCJPAA's ongoing training support. A snapshot look at available training in the late 1960s reveals the following. Training was not mandatory for anyone, and only the Maine State Police and a few of the larger local police departments had training programs. In most police departments, a new recruit was given a badge and a gun and started patrolling on his first day of work. Training was non-existent for correctional officers (state and county) and a prosecutor's education in law school and his courtroom experience were his only training. Judges learned to be judges by trying cases, and service providers (the few who existed) had nothing but their experience to teach them how to help criminal justice clients.

MCJPAA funding evolved into a three-part approach to provide adequate training to address the above-described situation. The most important and successful part of this effort was to fund, establish and maintain a state-wide, criminal justice training facility -- the Maine Criminal Justice Academy (MCJA) at a total project costs of $1,288,091 ($794,441 federal and 492,650 state).

In 1959, the Maine Chiefs of Police Association established the Maine Municipal Police Training Council. The council worked with the Maine Municipal Association to establish basic training schools (initially two but later four weeks) at Camp Keyes in Augusta and at regional locations throughout Maine. In 1966 and 1967, MMA and the Training Council obtained federal funds and engaged Dr. John Nickerson of the University of Maine to conduct a detailed study of law enforcement training needs. That study and the subsequent planning efforts of the Training Council (many of whom were founding members of the MCJPAA Board of Directors) laid the groundwork for the NCJA.

The MCJPAA staff and Board worked with the Council to build upon these initial efforts. The MCJPAA funded the purchase of the former Thomas College in Waterville to house a permanent Academy as well as its original staff; supplemental staffing for corrections training; all of the instructional and living equipment; contract instructors for specialty curriculum; physical fitness equipment; the library staffing and equipment; etc.

The Academy, "housed" within the Department of Public Safety and located in Waterville, Maine, has a 13 member Board of Trustees appointed by the Governor. With only fifteen (15) full-time employees, the MCJA depends upon donated instructors for its training cadre. The largest contributor is the Maine State Police, but many municipal and county departments, as well as the Attorney General and District Attorneys and other state agencies, provide personnel to teach various courses.

While the Academy was available to all elements of Maine's criminal justice system, its initial emphasis was to provide basic instruction (currently 12 weeks) to new law enforcement officers. MCJPAA funds also enabled the Academy to develop and deliver a basic course for correctional officers and to provide management, specialized, and refresher training for both police and correctional personnel. The MCJPAA was also instrumental in the passage of state legislation mandating basic training for all new police and corrections officers, as well as mandated in-service programs for corrections.

Of special note, is a project funded by the MCJPAA, which allowed the Academy to validate its entry criteria and its course content for law enforcement training. The Academy, with the assistance of experts in the field, surveyed Maine's entire law enforcement community to identify the tasks of and verify the skills, knowledge, abilities, etc., necessary for an individual to function as a police officer. The information obtained was analyzed, compared with course content, and the courses modified as necessary to produce a curriculum designed to meet the needs of modern police work. This effort was, in fact, a monumental feat for such a small agency, and it was accomplished at a fraction of the cost incurred by other states. Not surprisingly, the MCJA is undertaking a similar effort for its correctional programs.

Additionally, the MCJA, using mostly MCJPAA grant funds, has arranged, sponsored or facilitated numerous meetings, specialized courses and training programs for state and local prosecutors, juvenile service providers, judicial employees, probation and parole officers, juvenile intake workers and the law enforcement community. The only element yet to fully utilize the Academy and its facilities is the judiciary itself.

Since 1975, the funding for the Academy's basic operation has been provided by the State Legislature, but specialized and in-service programs were funded by the MCJPAA until federal funding terminated in 1982. In all, 46 awards were made to the MCJA for a total of $1,871,335 ($1,610,880 federal and $260,455 state).

The second part of MCJPAA's overall training effort was the numerous awards for specialized training not available at the Academy. These awards were generally less than $2,000 each and enabled one or two individuals to receive training in specialized or technical areas. Each year, the MCJPAA budgeted funds for each segment of the criminal justice system for such training. While many courses were held out of state, MCJPAA funds, wherever possible, brought quality instructors to Maine to provide training to the maximum number of professionals. Additionally, most awards for out-of-state training had special conditions requiring the attendees to assist the Academy in duplicating similar courses. Non-Academy specialized training will be discussed more in the various functional area reviews. All totalled, however, the MCJPAA made over 600 training awards for specialized training.

The third part was to fund the development of criminal justice degree programs at several Maine colleges. Two-year programs were instituted at the University of Maine Augusta, the University of Maine Bangor, SMVTI in South Portland and a four-year program at the University of Maine in Portland. This effort included 20 subgrants for a total of $490,416 ($484,885 federal and $5,531 state). Today, the criminal justice programs have become institutionalized and are graduating students who are are better prepared to become criminal justice professionals.

B. LAW ENFORCEMENT

1. Training. In addition to the Academy training programs, the MCJPAA awarded 188 subgrants to local police departments for $217,539 (federal) and 37 subgrants to the Maine State Police for $71,629 (federal). The awards were usually under $2,000 each and were for training sessions, conferences and seminars which were mostly out of state. The training was in specialized areas such as Kodak's school for law enforcement photography, Smith & Wesson's Armorer's School, polygraph training, homicide investigation training, bomb schools and explosives training, and police management school for administrators and supervisors. The formal training was supplemented by the informal exchange of ideas and the opportunity to meet and learn from one's counterparts in other states. In many cases, Maine officers returned as qualified instructors to teach at the Academy in either the basic or in-service programs or to instruct the members of their own departments. Unfortunately, with the loss of MCJPAA funds and budget cuts suffered by most departments, specialized training has become inaccessible to many departments and it is more difficult for the Academy to find qualified instructors.

2. Statewide Communications System.

The emergency radio communications and data processing programs involved a statewide system designed under the authority of MCJPAA and in cooperation with the Maine Chiefs of Police Association and the Maine State Police (DPS) to provide standard configuration, 8-channel, 100 watt mobile radio units; 4-channel portable units, the necessary backbone consisting of transmitters, repeaters, and the required UHF 450 and microwave controls to operate them. In addition, six regional communications centers (RCC's) were equipped with consoles, data devices to interface with the central message switch (together with upgraded land-lines), and coded tone emitters. The MCJPAA provided the funding for the system and in addition, MCJPAA staff coordinated the system design, managed the system acquisition and the system implementation and installation.

The initial radio system installation brought all law enforcement into the VHF-FM high band range and established a uniform 10-code system; uniform call signs, and a uniform statewide operation SOP for the RCC's. Standardization was further promulgated by the design and channel configuration of the mobile and portable radios.

The RCC's are located at SCARBORO SP (serving Regions 1, 2, 5); Oxford SO (SOUTH PARIS) (serving Regions 2, 5); AUGUSTA SP (serving Regions 3, 5, 7); ORONO SP (serving Regions 4, 6, 8); HOULTON SP (serving Region 9); Washington SO (MACHIAS) (serving Region 8).

The backbone system was designed utilizing a combination of UHF and microwave controls that could ultimately be replaced by microwave, giving the State a basic microwave system for long distance telecommunications, including voice and data, as a supplement to the commercial telephone system (or a partial replacement). The tone emitters were sited at each RCC and enabled the implementation of a tone controlled paging system for interested users.

During the system implementation, coverage was extended to include Probation & Parole; Corrections and its institutions; the District Attorneys; Attorney General and the Criminal Division; Inland Fisheries and Game; Marine Resources; Motor Vehicle Enforcement; Liquor Enforcement; Fire Marshall; Civil Emergency Preparedness; and the Governor's Office. These agencies acquired their equipment under the MCJPAA contract with Motorola and were assigned call signs by the State Police. EMS system vehicles and ambulances were also permitted to access the system, as were several federal agencies in the law enforcement field (i.e. DEA, FBI, ATF, Coast Guard, Togus VA, etc.). The Maine Yankee Nuclear Generating Station's emergency system also accesses the statewide system.

In order to ensure system maintenance and necessary upgrading, the backbone system was vested with the Department of Public Safety, and its maintenance staff was trained in microwave as well as RF maintenance. The DPS radio maintenance unit was also provided all necessary test and repair equipment as well as two snowmobiles and trailers to enable them to access the mountain tops during the winter.

Two high speed data terminals were provided at each RCC to access the state's Motor Vehicle and Drivers License records; the National Law Enforcement Teletype System; and the National Crime Information Center through a message switch located at the Augusta RCC. The switch consisted of two back-to-back (duplexed for backing) Honeywell Level 6, mini-computers (which could also perform other functions in addition to the switching). One of the added features was a state-based Outstanding Warrants and Wanted file and other features were planned to enhance services to the law enforcement officer in the field (and help ensure his safety).

Aside from the technological enhancement, the most significant benefit of the system was the ability provided to every person in the field, especially in criminal justice, to communicate with one another, regardless of what agency or what level of government (state, county, municipal) they served. To this date, no other statewide system exists which is as far reaching in its day-to-day operational capability AND in its simplicity of operation.

3. Special Investigative Units The MCJPAA always encouraged the pooling and sharing of resources and coordinated and cooperative approaches to problem solving. These concepts were demonstrated to be highly successful in subgrants awarded for specialized investigative units directed at specific crimes, such as drug trafficking and property crimes. Although disbanded now, the Division of Special Investigation (DSI) was an excellent example of how law enforcement (and prosecutors) at the municipal, county and state levels worked together to address a critical problem -- in this case, drug smuggling and trafficking. DSI evolved from three smaller MEG (metropolitan enforcement group) units funded by the MCJPAA to combat a growing illegal drug problem. The MEG units were located in the Portland, Lewiston/Auburn and Bangor/Brewer areas. The MCJPAA funds covered operating costs, equipment needs and "buy" money of these undercover units and the local departments "donated" the manpower. The operations were directed at traffickers (not users) and the conviction rate of units was excellent (over 90%). Unfortunately, illegal drug activities increased and became more sophisticated and widespread. Investigations became more complex, and the jurisdictional authority of local officers was limited. With MCJPAA's assistance, the MEG units were consolidated at the state level and "housed" within the Department of Public Safety - Maine State Police, to form the DSI. The MCJPAA, using block and discretionary funds, continued to provide funding, and the local departments and the Maine State Police donated the manpower. DSI was organized into the Northern, Central and Southern Divisions and had an advisory board consisting of police chiefs and prosecutors. It operated successfully for several years, continuing the same high conviction rate as the MEG units. At its strongest point, there were approximately 30 agents working in teams, conducting undercover and surveillance operations throughout Maine.

MCJPAA funding eventually terminated, local and state budget restrictions made it increasingly difficult to donate manpower and operational differences eventually led to DSI's termination. Shortly following DSI's demise, the Maine State Police received special state funds to form a small drug enforcement unit. The State Police developed a cooperative agreement with and received operating funds from the Drug Enforcement Agency (DEA) and have directed their efforts at major drug smuggling and trafficking activities. Interestingly enough, some local departments (i.e. Bangor) still donate manpower (whenever available) to the new unit. While understaffed and underfunded, the unit continues to prove that law enforcement at all levels (federal, state, county and municipal) can work together effectively.

4. Other Police Programs. The MCJPAA provided funds to enable most Maine police departments to have basic police equipment necessary to operate efficiently. Wherever possible, the equipment was standardized and purchased through a bid process. The pool bid process used by the MCJPAA saved thousands of dollars and enabled it to secure a maximum amount of quality equipment at the least cost. MCJPAA funds purchased 35mm cameras for most agencies, as well as fully equipping regional photo labs throughout the state. Departments receiving labs had to agree to process work for surrounding departments. MCJPAA awards also secured polygraph equipment (and training) but again recipient departments had to provide services to other departments. Grant funds were also used to modernize and equip the State Police Crime Lab and the State Bureau of Identification, to procure computer systems for the Maine State Police, the Criminal Justice Academy, and the Bangor regional law enforcement group and to fund police cruisers and miscellaneous investigative equipment previously unaffordable to many departments.

C. COURTS -- INCLUDING PROSECUTION AND DEFENSE

1. Training. In the courts area, the MCJPAA awarded 189 specialized training grants for $245,168 (federal). At one time, almost every criminal prosecutor in Maine (Assistant Attorneys General, District Attorneys and Assistant District Attorneys) had attended either the Northwestern Short Course for Prosecutors or the NADA's one-week prosecutors school in Houston. The courts used MCJPAA grant funds to send new District and Superior Court Justices to the National College for State Judiciary in Reno, Nevada, as well as to provide instate training (at the Academy) for nonjudicial court personnel.

2. The Administrative Office of the Courts. MCJPAA's major accomplishment in the court system was to develop, fund and help implement a central administrative structure for the entire court system called the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC). The AOC, under the direction of the Chief Justice and headed by a State Court Administrator, undertook the difficult task of trying to improve and standardize, to the extent possible, the operations of the various courts. Regional court administrators were assigned to both the District and Superior Courts, with territories in Northern, Central and Southern parts of Maine, and worked closely with judges, prosecutors, court clerks and other court personnel to refine the operation of the system. MCJPAA subgrants funded the full cost of the AOC for two and a half years until, in 1977, the Maine Legislature institutionalized funding for the AOC. The MCJPAA continued to award funds to the AOC for several special study projects including the Law Library Study, the Court Facilities Study, the Court Records Study and the Judicial Personnel Study. Each of these projects either laid the groundwork for or provided direct improvement to the important areas it addressed. Today the AOC is a well-run, integral part of the Maine Court system and is working to further modernize and automate court activities with data processing equipment and modern management techniques. A noteworthy award of $68,276 ($50,002 federal and $18,274 state) to the Courts provided recording equipment for each of the thirty-three (33) District Courts which enabled the lower court to be a court of record and helped to eliminate many retrials in, as well as some appeals to, the Superior Court.

3. State Prosecution. MCJPAA grant funds provided the Attorney General's Office with additional attorneys and investigators who staffed a White Collar Crime effort, a State Fraud Unit, a Law Enforcement Education Section and a legal instructor program.

MCJPAA subgrants also provided the funding for staff support and consultant assistance to both the Adult and Juvenile Code Revision Commissions enabling Maine to be one of the first states to completely revise and modernize its adult and juvenile criminal statutes.

4. Other. Local prosecutors received subgrants for specialized staff assistance to provide victim/witness programs and police legal advisors. MCJPAA also funded numerous internships which allowed law students to work summers for the judiciary and in the District Attorneys' and Attorney General's Offices. Defense efforts included awards to the Maine Law School for funding the school's public defender project and for an experimental assigned counsel project directed at providing counsel for indigent defendants.

D. CORRECTIONS

1. Training. In addition to funding correctional programs at to the Academy, the MCJPAA awarded 15 subgrants for $13,701 (federal) to the county sheriffs for specialized training for jail personnel. It also awarded 105 subgrants to the Department of Corrections (formerly the Department of Mental Health and Corrections) for a total of 118,436 (111,654 federal and 6,782 state) to provide specialized training to state personnel. While the county awards were usually for relatively small amounts and for one person to receive training, the state awards tended to be for several (4 to 8) individuals (usually administrators) for much larger amounts and for conferences and seminars.

2. County Jail Programs. Major efforts at the local level centered around the condition of the jails themselves. Because of their generally poor condition, the MCJPAA developed a statewide jail construction/renovation program. Each county could apply for up to $112,500 of federal funds, matched on a 50-50 basis with local dollars, to assist in either new jail construction or current facility renovations. The program was one of the few "bricks and mortar" programs the MCJPAA developed. Awards under this program were made to eleven counties from 1972 through 1977 and totaled $1,011,305 of federal dollars. Additionally, in late 1979, the MCJPAA funded a study grant to the Maine Sheriffs Association to review all county jails, primarily from an architectural perspective, and their current and projected inmate populations. The study produced specific recommendations to each county relative to needed capacity, renovation possibilities and/or construction alternatives.

MCJPAA's final major jail activity was to award a master Standards Compliance subgrant to the Maine Sheriffs Association for $186,043 ($166,526 federal and $19,515 state) to help all counties comply with state jail standards. This three-part subgrant addressed life safety issues at each facility, standardized policies and procedures, and addressed recreational needs specific to each county. Of special note is a small computer system purchased through the standards grant. Originally operated by MSA staff, the system was transferred to one of the counties, but is operated for the benefit of all counties. The counties input prisoner information and the system provides detailed management information and inmate history. Other smaller awards were made to most counties for a wide variety of improvement efforts, to include recreational projects, mental health services, drug and alcohol counseling, security improvements, classification systems, prisoner transport and in-house training efforts. In all, the counties have made good use of MCJPAA funds and, especially in the last two years, have made excellent progress in improving the level of local correctional services in Maine.

3. State Corrections. At the state level, the MCJPAA worked through the Department of Corrections (DOC), or its predecessor, the Department of Mental Health and Corrections-Bureau of Corrections, to provide assistance to the state's three institutions, the Maine State Prison (MSP), the Maine Correctional Center (MCC), the Maine Youth Center (MYC) and the Division of Probation and Parole (P&P). The MCJPAA approved several major state awards using block and discretionary funds. The first was an award in 1971 for $146,197 ($109,630 federal and $36,567 state) for consultants to complete a statewide correctional study to assess the status of the state's correctional system and to recommend improvements. In 1972, MCJPAA funded, through the Bureau of Corrections, Project Exit, which focused on obtaining employment for inmates released from for the state system. Project Exit operated for about two and one half years at a cost of $600,408 (all federal).

In 1979, the Bureau of Corrections received block and discretionary funds ($308,647 federal and $34,294 state for a total of $342,941) to develop a comprehensive State Corrections Master Plan which would serve as a blueprint for the state system. The largest undertaking by the Bureau of Corrections was the Community Justice Project (CJP). It was fully funded by the MCJPAA ($1,277,694 total, $1,139,408 federal and $138,286 state), operated for about four years and was extremely successful in its approach to providing appropriate services to criminal justice clients (adults and juveniles). The CJP was a community-based project which worked with the courts, law enforcement, the state institutions, service providers and the offenders and their families to provide appropriate assistance to clients released from the institutions. While providing services to many clients, the project also developed new techniques in securing adequate services for some of the Department's most difficult cases.

A MCJPAA funded project which would have provided state management with critically needed information was the Correctional Management Information System (CMIS). CMIS was a data processing system which could collect, analyze, summarize, etc., necessary inmate information and statistics which would allow top management to better plan and conduct their business as well as justify requests for new programs. The CMIS project lasted about five years and cost $320,926 ($283,983 federal and $36,043 state) before it was terminated.

Another major MCJPAA funded project was a three-year planning and implementation effort which cost $643,478 ($580,007 federal and $63,471 state) to help bring the three state institutions into compliance with the ACA's prison standards. The project funded staff performed program audits at each institution and developed and prioritized the improvements. Although some policies and procedures were changed, most of the actual improvements were made by purchasing equipment necessary to bring the state into compliance with certain standards.

In 1975 and 1977, the MCJPAA funded a community pre-release center for southern Maine. The awards totaled $283,522 ($255,170 federal and $28,352 state) and covered the personnel and operating costs of the center for 31 months.

4. Other. In addition to the major projects mentioned above, the MCJPAA funded several awards to the Department of Corrections for smaller projects which have either provided one-time assistance or continued to operate successfully, to include: (1) Project Hold, a private, non-profit corporation which, on a contractual basis, works to find employment for newly released inmates (adult and juvenile). This well-run program is the Department's only offender employment effort and, in effect, replaced the more expensive work attempted by Project Exit, (and later six state job developer positions); (2) an automated inmate accounting system at the Maine State Prison which provided a small computer and programming needed for timely and accurate accounting of inmate funds, and (3) consultant services necessary to separate and recodify the correction statutes (necessitated by the separation of the Department of Corrections from the Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation).

MCJPAA also provided funds to the Division of Probation and Parole to enable the P&P to secure short-term shelter, food, medical services, clothing, etc., to newly released offenders until they could support themselves. The awards were called "purchase of service" grants and were used to serve adults and juveniles. This support lasted from 1971 to 1978, and the six subgrants totaled $185,312 ($158,993 federal and $26,321 state). Other subgrants provided staffing to the state for numerous positions such as social workers, clerical help, a deputy warden at MSP, statisticians, a half-way house director, a planner, mental health "extenders", P&P officers, job developers, P&P court officers, a jail inspector and a juvenile plans coordinator. While the Department has been successful in institutionalizing some of the positions, many have been terminated.

E. JUVENILE JUSTICE

1. Training. The MCJPAA awarded a total of 85 subgrants for $108,122 in federal dollars for specialized training relating to juvenile justice. The awards were made not only to police, courts, prosecution, and corrections agency at both the state and local levels but also to private not-for-profit service providers as well. With the exception of the larger "training fund" subgrants to the state and several awards to local police departments for the 12 week program at the Delinquency Control Institute in California, the majority of the awards tended to average less than $500.00 each and much of the training was offered in state.

2. Residential Facilities. A major long-term juvenile program was a system of residential facilities to include group homes, long-term care facilities and emergency shelters funded by the MCJPAA. These community-based facilities provide not only housing but also offer educational and treatment components designed to serve juvenile justice clients. They provide, in reality, the only alternative to incarceration. The MCJPAA provided financial assistance to 17 residential facilities, offering funding for three or four years on a declining basis and assisted many in securing local and state continuation funding. Many facilities have continued without MCJPAA funds and are still providing services to juvenile justice clients.

3. Juvenile Incarceration Reform. Working with the JJAG and toward compliance with JJDPA legislation, the MCJPAA funded projects which monitored local jail facilities relative to their activities with juveniles and assisted the counties in attaining sight and sound separation between incarcerated juveniles and adults. These projects also started the work (continuing by the JJAG) toward the total removal of juveniles from facilities which incarcerate adults.

4. Other. Other important juvenile justice programs supported, entirely or partially, include: a complete revision of Maine's juvenile statutes accomplished through the Juvenile Code Revision Commission, several Youth Aid Bureaus located in local police departments, and a wide variety of community-based diversion and prevention projects, generally operated by not-for-profit organizations, which provide services ranging from counseling and education to summer employment and recreation.

F. SYSTEM WIDE PROJECTS

1. Uniform Crime Reporting (UCR). A major problem in Maine and an impediment to good planning was the lack of accurate and complete crime data and statistics. To address this problem, the MCJPAA, working with the Maine Chiefs of Police Association (MCOPA), the Maine State Police and the Maine Sheriffs Association (MSA), funded, using discretionary and block funds, the Maine Uniform Crime Reporting project. This project worked to develop uniform definitions of crime and to implement a system of collecting, analyzing, and publishing crime data and statistics in Maine. The Maine UCR has been nationally recognized by the FBI as an exemplary project. UCR personnel, located in the Department of Public Safety, worked not only with the State Police, municipal police and county sheriffs to gather information on reported crimes, clearance data, receive and store fingerprint cards, etc. but also with court and prosecution officials to obtain convictions and sentencing data and with state and local corrections agencies to record incarceration and release information. The UCR's excellent work has increased the flow of information to the State Bureau of Identification (SBI) tremendously and enabled the SBI to provide reliable information to criminal justice system personnel (both planners and operational personnel). The MCJPAA supported the UCR project for about six years with over four grants totalling $411,252 (federal $318,554 and $92,698 state until 1979 when the state funding became available).

2. Intern Program. The MCJPAA funded a very successful intern program that introduced several hundred students to Maine's criminal justice system and provided needed assistance to criminal justice agencies.

3. Technical Assistance. MCJPAA 's technical assistance program provided short-term, expert assistance to criminal justice agencies to address a wide spectrum of needs both on a scheduled basis (based on formal technical assistance plans) and in response to emergent and crisis needs in three ways:

a) MCJPAA supplied funding for appropriate assistance and assisted the recipient to obtain the services of a suitable consultant (including assistance to develop requests for proposals and contract drafting).

b) MCJPAA monitored national, no cost technical assistance resources and matched the requestor to the appropriate source. MCJPAA then facilitated the delivery of technical assistance (e.g. assisted in drafting formal requests for assistance, coordinated delivery schedules, site preparations, etc.). Or, MCJPAA, through a search of its training files, located in-state experts, matched the expert with the requestor, and if each was agreeable, provided for delivery of assistance at minimum costs.

c) MCJPAA, with agency staff, provided expert services at no cost to the recipient in a number of areas: accounting, budget preparation, business records systems (manual and automatic), data collection system (manual and automatic), monitoring and evaluation design, data analysis, contract preparation, preparation of request for proposals, and grants preparation.

V. RECOMMENDATIONS

The Maine Criminal Justice Planning and Assistance Agency's Executive Committee, based on its knowledge of the impact of the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration program on Maine's criminal justice system, recommends the following:

1. Support for criminal justice training, through the Maine Criminal Justice Academy, should be continued and expanded. The Maine Criminal Justice Academy was originally funded with LEAA money and is currently supported by State funds and fees from participants. The Academy currently provides training for law enforcement and corrections personnel, as mandated by statute, as well as to other groups as appropriate. Other State departments should be encouraged to use the Academy for their training purposes and should be encouraged to provide training programs across departmental lines for greater coordination and understanding among departments.

2. Programs which have upgraded criminal justice activities, particularly in the areas of communications, records and computer technology, should be maintained. These programs have greatly increased the effectiveness and responsiveness of Maine criminal justice system.

3. The process of statewide planning, interaction and coordination of and by Maine's criminal justice community should be continued. Means should be found to continue this process, which was the responsibility of the MCJPAA and its Board of Directors.
