

School Safety

YOUTH,
SCHOOL
AND

110565
110572

RIGHTS
OF PASSAGE

U.S. Department of Justice
National Institute of Justice

110565-
110572

This document has been reproduced exactly as received from the person or organization originating it. Points of view or opinions stated in this document are those of the authors and do not necessarily represent the official position or policies of the National Institute of Justice.

Permission to reproduce this copyrighted material has been granted by

National School Safety
Center

to the National Criminal Justice Reference Service (NCJRS).

Further reproduction outside of the NCJRS system requires permission of the copyright owner.

J. Moran
©78

Pepperdine University's National School Safety Center is a partnership of the U.S. Department of Justice and U.S. Department of Education. NSSC's goal is to promote school safety, improve discipline, increase attendance, and suppress drug traffic and abuse in all our nation's schools.

Ronald D. Stephens, Executive Director
 Stuart Greenbaum, Communications Director
 Ronald W. Garrison, Field Services Director
 Donna Clontz, General Counsel
 James E. Campbell, Business Manager

Pepperdine University NSSC Steering Council:
 David Davenport, President, Chair; William B. Adrian, Provost, Vice Chair; Michael F. Adams, Vice President, University Affairs; Nancy Magnusson-Fagan, Dean, Graduate School of Education and Psychology; J. Edward Mandrell, Dean of Students; Ronald F. Phillips, Dean, School of Law; Charles B. Rannels, Chancellor; Ronald D. Stephens, Executive Director, NSSC; John G. Watson, Vice President, Student Affairs; and James R. Wilburn, Vice President and Dean, School of Business and Management.

School Safety

School Safety is published by the National School Safety Center to communicate current trends and effective programs in school safety to educators, law enforcers, lawyers, judges, government officials, business leaders, the media and the public. Publication dates are September (Fall issue), January (Winter issue) and May (Spring issue). Annual subscription: $9.00.

Ronald D. Stephens, Executive Editor
 Stuart Greenbaum, Editor/Art Director
 Brenda Turner, Associate Editor
 Cynthia Randolph, Photocompositor

Articles in this publication may be reprinted - excluding individually copyrighted material - with credit to School Safety, NSSC and a copy of reprints to NSSC. School Safety encourages the submission of original articles, artwork, book reviews and letters to the editor and will review and consider each item for publication.

Correspondence for School Safety and the National School Safety Center should be addressed to: National School Safety Center, 16830 Ventura Blvd., Suite 200, Encino, CA 91436, telephone 818/377-6200.

Prepared under Grant No. 85-MU-CX-0003 from the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention, Office of Justice Programs, U.S. Department of Justice. Points of view or opinions in this document are those of the author and do not necessarily represent the official position or policies of the U.S. Department of Justice, U.S. Department of Education or Pepperdine University.

Copyright © 1988 National School Safety Center.

About the cover:

Just as passing from grade to grade, growing up requires learning and balancing a series of rights and responsibilities. Cover by Geoffrey Moss. Copyright © 1978, Washington Post Writers Group. Reprinted with permission.

CONTENTS

4

16

110565
 4 Beyond rights and responsibilities

By James A. Rapp

110566
 10 Educated rites of passage

By Ronald W. Garrison

110567
 12 Emotional safety and growing up

By Bob Ditter

110568
 16 Disappearing markers and deviant behavior

By David Elkind

110569
 20 Significant adults and at-risk youth

By Joseph J. Galbo

110570
 24 Schooling children about alcohol abuse

110571
 26 Peer counseling for troubled youth

By Ira Sachnoff

110572
 28 They dare to care

By Ronald D. Stephens

Updates

- 2 NSSC Update
- 30 National Update
- 31 Legislative Update
- 32 Legal Update
- 34 Resource Update

Resources

- 9 NSSC Resources
- 23 "What's Wrong With This Picture?" (film/videotape)
- 35 "Principals of Leadership"

BY RONALD W. GARRISON

Ancient rites once facilitated important social development for youth; schools now must reinstitutionalize this process by teaching about rights and responsibilities.

Educated rites of passage

Schools and their communities are preventing gang membership, bullying, substance abuse and juvenile criminal activity through positive adult-sponsored rituals called "rites of passage."

Rites and rituals — which are based on the human need for acceptance, ceremony and recognition — have been vital in the past as a way to pass the culture's values from one generation to the next. One dictionary defines a rite of passage as: "A significant event in an individual's life that indicates a transition from one stage to another, as from adolescence to adulthood, and that may be marked by a ritual or ceremony."

Rites of passage

In ancient Greece, for example, a youthful resident became a citizen at age 16 and gained the rights and responsibilities of adulthood. In East Germany today, 98 percent of the nation's 14-year-olds take part in the secular equivalent of a religious confirmation. And in Japan, where the crime rate is the lowest of any modern developed country, parents, teachers, public officials and neighbors guide young people through the transitions from childhood to adolescence to adulthood.

Graduation, a driver's license and marriage are examples of rites of passage in our culture. Although these rites of passage are often combined with earlier childhood rituals such as birthdays, prom nights and even football games, a growing number of this country's youths and their families no longer have the time or inclination to participate in socially valuable rituals.

As a result, many positive rituals of transition — once vital to American society — have become blurred or replaced with anti-social mutations. Negative, and often violent, associations have filled the vacuum. Participation in bullying, hazing, cults, gangs and substance abuse has become accepted among the young.

Without adult supervision, youths may upset the delicate balance that exists between rights and responsibilities, causing what they may perceive as rights to degenerate into license where crime, violence and victimization follow. Children do not automatically know how to act responsibly. Adults must teach children the socially accepted rules and codes of their culture. In the past, community adults took charge in the collective rearing of the young. But many adults today have lost interest in giving children the guidance and supervision they need.

From childhood to adulthood

In many cultures, rites of passage and pro-social initiations perform a valuable service to the community by giving children a sense of belonging and a focus for the future. Apprenticeships, extended families, clubs, positive adult role models, religious involvement, adult-supervised youth activities, future orientation (as opposed to instant gratification) and respect for wisdom all contribute to the individual's commitment to the group.

In our society today, youth-serving agencies need to develop partnerships with the schools, parents and community to publicly recognize the achievements that occur during childhood. Such recognition is particularly important for children who may feel trapped by their economic or social status. In this way, "Rights of Passage" are given to children as they progress toward adulthood, reinforcing investment in the group, community and society.

In the words of Thomas A. Leemon, author of The Rites of Passage in a Student Culture, "The continuity of a society depends upon its recurring revitalization...through celebrations that accompany individual or group transitions...called rites of passage."

Fortunately, some schools and communities are already providing appropriate and law-abiding rites of passage:

- In a Philadelphia school district, high school students participate in "Rites of Passage," a preventive program designed to assist students in becoming productive members of society without a dependence on drugs.

Ronald W. Garrison is field services director for NSSC.

- High school seniors and juniors from 18 districts in the Yorktown Heights, New York, area participate every year in a wilderness program, which provides transitions to adulthood by teaching a wide range of adult skills.
- In both the Minneapolis-St. Paul area and in Houston, "Coming of Age" participation programs have been successful as prevention strategies in counseling smoking pregnant teens.

In Rites of Passage, Joseph Kett commented that both gangs and other youth subcultures "give young people access to the symbols, if not always the substance of adult status." Kett says this attitude has created "a young person bored by the institutional rituals of adolescence" and culminating in "young people becoming more like adults and adults becoming more like young people."

This lack of distinction between children and adults has accelerated in recent years. Law enforcers have noted that juveniles are committing more serious crimes at younger ages. Without recognition by their peers and adults, growing numbers of youths are able to commit acts of aggression, violence and substance abuse because they lack a formal connection with each other, their school, the community and the nation.

Jeffrey Burton Russell, a history professor at the University of California, Santa Barbara, and an authority on cults, reports that youths today are becoming more involved in cults and devil worship activity. "It is plausible that current youth interest in cults may be linked to the decline of positive rituals historically offered by religious institutions and schools."

The role of schools

Stanford University professors Shirley Brice Heath and Milbrey Wallin McLaughlin, writing in the Kappan, suggest that schools and social policies must move away from isolation "to an integrated view of children as members of a larger social system" where each child is "rooted in a functional analysis of transitional objectives...rather than a (program) aimed solely at the transmission of skills and knowledge." In other words, the social needs of children are becoming as important as academics.

Rite-of-passage relationships created through school and community instruction during the day, evenings and on weekends will reduce juvenile violence for no other reason than simply knowing where the children are and what they are doing. Schools must accept their responsibility for providing a safe, secure and peaceful haven for community events and celebrations. Becoming a full partner in assisting neighborhood groups, clubs or agencies with their ritual efforts for children makes schools safer and renews the school's connection with the parents and community.

Copyright © 1985, Washington Post Writers Group. Reprinted with permission.

Schools concerned with the safety and well-being of their students should actively support and promote a positive student-based rite-of-passage process. An extensive long-term program starting on the primary level and continuing through high school that gives children an investment in the school would significantly reduce the fundamental reasons for involvement in youth gangs. Harvard education professor Perry London said, "Schools' new role must include training for civility and civic virtue, as well as a measure of damage control for personal maladjustment."

Administrators and teachers report using the following techniques for productive rite-of-passage programs:

- Schools need to lead in legitimizing positive rites of passage for children, enriching their social responsibilities, creating empathy for others and instilling self-empowerment.
- School staff and students should practice and use ceremonial and presentation skills. Schools can create opportunities to recognize individual and group achievement, then invite the community to participate.
- Principals should establish a ritual audit of their schools. If hazing rituals are found, they should be replaced with positive rite-of-passage programs.
- Schools that re-establish ties to families, older citizens and the community through rites-of-passage festivals and celebrations will again become the cultural hub of the neighborhood.
- When schools give at-risk and disruptive youth opportunities to renew commitments through passage programs to self, family, school and the community, children discover reasons to stay in school and out of trouble.
- And by providing age appropriate and responsible "Rights-of-Passage" programs, schools will successfully compete for the time and interest of children, which has been dominated by television, "hanging-out," exploitation and crime.

Without the benefit of socially acceptable rites and rituals, individual needs become more important than the collective good of society. School and community wrongs can be turned into "rites" through an ongoing commitment to reaffirm the passages of childhood. □

References

1. Heath, Shirley Brice, and McLaughlin, Milbrey Wallin. (April 1987). "A Child Resource Policy: Moving Beyond Dependence on School and Family." Phi Delta Kappan, 576-580.
2. London, Perry. (May 1987). "Character Education and Clinical Intervention: A Paradigm Shift for U.S. Schools." Phi Delta Kappan, 667-673.
3. Turner, Victor. (1969). The Ritual Process. Ithaca, New York: Cornell University Press.
4. Van Gennep, Arnold. (1960). The Rites of Passage. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.