DANGEROUS SEX OFFENDERS: CLASSIFYING, PREDICTING, AND EVALUATING
OUTCOMES OF CLINICAL TREATMENT IN BRIDGEWATER, MASSACHUSETTS, 1982-1985
(ICPSR 8985)

SUMMARY: The purpose of this data collection was to validate two classification systems, one for rapists and one for child molesters, used in a Massachusetts treatment center for sexually aggressive offenders. Rapists and child molesters were classified as two types of sex offenders and then clinically classified into different subtypes based on criteria for the two taxonomies being tested. Variables include type of traffic offenses, criminal offenses, and sex offenses charged. Data on dispositions of cases are also provided along with parole and discharge information. Offenders' post-release offenses were categorized into traffic offenses, non-traffic offenses, and sex offenses. CLASS IV

UNIVERSE: All sex offender cases referred to a treatment center in Bridgewater, Massachusetts for intensive observation and then released.
SAMPLING: Of the 1,500 sex offender cases that were referred to the treatment center in Bridgewater, Massachusetts for intensive observation during 1982-1985, 500 were committed and became treatment patients. Of these patients, 270 were released after varying lengths of treatment and were selected as the sample in the study.
