INTRODUCTION

On December 12, 1989, the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (the Act) was amended by the addition of section 107A, as part of the Drug Free Schools and Communities Act amendments (P.L. 101-226). Section 107A authorizes the Secretary of DHHS to establish a program to make grants to eligible entities to enable such entities to provide and improve the delivery of services to children and youth whose parents are substance abusers. Although the original authorization level for the Emergency Child Abuse and Neglect Prevention Services Program was $40,000,000 for fiscal year 1990 and such funds as may be necessary for fiscal years 1991, 1992, 1993, no funds were appropriated to implement the program in the 1990 fiscal year. At the end of the 1990 legislative session, $17,871,945 was appropriated for the 1991 fiscal year. Ninety-four projects were funded during fiscal year 1991. Among these are specialized training for social and protective services workers; coordinated, comprehensive multidisciplinary service delivery models; information/education projects regarding the relationship of substance abuse and child abuse; and projects to improve service delivery to children of substance abusers and to remove barriers to treatment of the parent's addiction.

The National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect (NCCAN) has had no indication that Congress expects to increase the appropriation of FY 1992 and 1993 beyond the $17,871,945 necessary to fund the continuation of projects funded in FY 1991.

This project will provide "emergency room" service for respite to abused and neglected children and their parents, with procedures that permit comprehensive services to the parents and a delay in the normal judicial process to prevent family disintegration and promote entrance into treatment for parents. The project will utilize a multidisciplinary team of professionals from the social services, mental health and anti-addiction services. The project is directed to a Hispanic population and will create materials in a bilingual format.

This project will provide "user friendly" services to drug and alcohol affected families to get them into the service loop without going to court. The project will incorporate two specific programs: (1) an in-home, family based preservation program to provide services designed to keep families in their homes; and (2) a day residential treatment program to provide behavioral, parenting and alcohol/drug treatment in a day treatment program. The primary focus will be single parent families, particularly where women are the head of household.

This project provides emergency and support services to children and youth reported to the child protective service system because of family substance abuse. A local consortium will provide a culturally responsive matrix of services to children and youth of drug-abusing families. Services will include crisis intervention, respite care, outreach and case management. Provision of these services at an early stage will help prevent further need for child protective services and stabilize the family.

This program will engage in an intensive home-based intervention with substance abusing families who are in crisis to help them develop resources to stay together. The program's aim is to provide comprehensive services which would stabilize the family. The program will reach out to families new to the protective service system to facilitate their exit from that system. All of the families to be served will have identified substance abuse problems. The program will begin as an intense intervention effort and gradually be integrated into the natural helping network of the neighborhood.

Through this program, an "emergency response team" will be available on a 24-hour basis to intervene in reported or suspected cases of child abuse or neglect. The team will evaluate both the primary and secondary needs of the family in an attempt to ensure family preservation. This team will collaborate their efforts with other services including: psychiatric and substance abuse treatment, parenting instruction, marriage counselling, respite care and direct financial assistance. The team will work with the family until a positive relationship has been developed with all ongoing service providers.

This project will coordinate immediate intervention to at-risk children of substance abusing parents. The project uses a team of professionals who participate in the assessment, development and delivery of services. A primary component is the use of the Family Unity Model which focuses on using a network of family, friends, neighbors and community resources to protect the children and enable them to remain with their family. The team members include specialists from social service, substance abuse, family unification and public health. Located in the community and user-friendly, it empowers families to develop their own solutions.

This project will create a neighborhood based family service center to respond to the needs of children and parents in low-income, substance abusing families. It will work to ensure the immediate safety of children, prevent out-of-home placement whenever possible, and promote improved child and family functioning. The project will focus on families with children four to 18 years of age and will complement the agency's already existing array of services for infants and toddlers from substance abusing families. The project will coordinate the resources of public and private agencies to provide emergency intervention, family stabilization, long term health and mental health services, drug treatment and social service support.
