SUBJECT: Strategic Implementation Plan for Community Policing

DATE: August 16, 1993

ACQUISITIONS

It is with a tremendous amount of pride that I am presenting to you our strategic plan for the implementation of community policing. As you are aware, this plan represents the collaborative efforts of many dedicated county citizens as well as police department and other government employees. It truly represents our community's blueprint for the future of policing in Montgomery County.

This document is a multi-year plan and is incremental in design. It prescribes adaptability and continual evaluation as necessary ingredients for its success. More importantly, it provides our department with a clearly defined course to follow in order to achieve its aims. At the same time, this strategic plan makes allowances for the many changes that will undoubtedly occur with respect to technological advancements and demographic trends within our community.

Our plan for policing enjoins all of our department's resources to work in a united partnership with our citizens and other county and government agencies. We have welcomed the full participation and involvement of the citizens we serve in developing this process of dynamic change within our department. Our renewed focus will be on solving problems consistent with the community's expectations in addition to enforcing laws. To these aims, we accept the challenge of promoting cooperative partnerships between our employees and the citizens we serve.

I believe that, with this plan, we have chosen the right course to enable us to achieve policing excellence in Montgomery County. Full implementation of community policing will require active participation and a continued commitment from the County Government and from all of our employees. I am confident that, together, we can attain what we have envisioned and designed for our community.

Dedication

This publication is dedicated to the many men and women who contributed so much of their time and energy to recommend innovative improvements in the manner in which we deliver police services to our citizens. To all of you, our employees, concerned citizens, and members of various governmental agencies who have demonstrated your commitment to making Montgomery County a better community in which to live and work, we are profoundly grateful.

A Time For Change

"There is no force so powerful as an idea whose time has come."

— Everett Dirksen

The Montgomery County Department of Police has begun to implement philosophical changes in the way in which it conducts the business of policing. We have redefined our mission and have identified values to guide us in accomplishing our organizational goals. In so doing, our department has begun to develop a strategic plan for policing for the future. This plan calls for slow and careful growth in order to ensure long term success.

One of the fundamental tenets of community policing is that of working in partnership with the community and other governmental agencies. Other police departments that have successfully implemented community policing have experienced increased citizen satisfaction with their departments and increased morale among their employees. To these aims, we are really striving for policing excellence. We hope to attain these goals by developing and promoting a climate of cooperation and trust between our employees and the citizens they serve.

We have sought input from all segments of our community as well as from all levels within our department in developing our strategic plan. Citizens and police employees have mutually participated in this process of identifying crime related issues, recommending solutions, and establishing the framework to analyze the effectiveness of the solutions. Using this approach, the community will have a voice in setting law enforcement priorities and will gain a far better understanding of their police department's capabilities and limitations. Officers and department employees will benefit from the self-satisfaction received from their ability to make a "real difference" and to be creative and innovative in their efforts towards problem resolution. We believe that this process of involving those closest to, or most affected by crime problems is really what community policing is all about. After all, they are usually the ones best suited to identify the proper solutions.

Executive Summary

Community policing will not be a cure for all of society's ills. Nor will it completely improve every aspect of our police department. It is, however, a good point from which to begin to make improvements in the manner in which we provide police services to the community as well as the way we function as an organization. From this point, we must continually strive to find better ways to improve the process.

Adaptability will be a major key to the success of our implementation plan. We cannot accurately predict what our department will look like two years or five years from now because the success of this endeavor will depend on our ability to identify any necessary changes and restructure or refine our efforts whenever they fail to bring about the best results. Although this is a multi-year plan for implementation, it is also an ongoing evaluation and refinement process.

"Our success will require commitment and patience from all who are involved."

We believe we have set a steady and prudent course for successfully accomplishing our goal of providing the highest quality of police services to the citizens of Montgomery County. Our success will require commitment and patience from all who are involved. It is essential that all participants in this process continue to work together to ensure that our implementation efforts are carefully crafted, engineered, implemented and continually evaluated. On behalf of the men and women of the Montgomery County Police Department and the many citizen members of our Community Policing Committees, I am proud to present our collaborative efforts for policing excellence in Montgomery County.

Chief of Police

A Plan For The Future

“Every society gets the kind of criminal it deserves. What is equally true is that every community gets the kind of law enforcement it insists on.”

— Robert F. Kennedy

Crime and social decay are paramount concerns facing every community in the nation. For years, the police have attempted to deal with the ever increasing demand for law enforcement services without corresponding increases in police resources. This has contributed to an environment in policing where we have become “incident driven” and primarily “reactive” in our approach to crime problems. New strategies and alternate resources must be developed if we hope to improve the quality and delivery of police services to the community.

One method is to combine proven, traditional styles of policing with new and innovative policing philosophies. As we begin to implement the philosophy of community policing and problem solving strategies, we must refocus our attention on the root causes of crime problems. Our primary concentration will shift from merely enforcing laws to finding long term solutions to crime problems. This changing emphasis will encourage a more “proactive” approach to community crime concerns. Like many police agencies, the Montgomery County Police Department has performed admirably in keeping abreast of emerging crime problems confronting our citizens. In spite of our best efforts, however, crime problems continue to plague and cause deterioration in many of our neighborhoods.

This situation has led us to the reality that the police alone cannot adequately control the crime and societal problems which affect the quality of life in our communities. The police and the community must work together if we hope to see lasting success in our endeavors to restore safety and reduce the fear of crime in our neighborhoods.

Introduction

This partnership requires that law abiding citizens work together with the police department and County Government to identify and solve their own neighborhood problems. From the police perspective, this process must focus on effectiveness as well as efficiency, and it must encourage quality over quantity. Officers and department employees must be encouraged to use initiative and creative and innovative solutions to accomplish their policing objectives. This is not necessarily a novel approach to policing, since many officers have been practicing similar policing philosophies for years. What is new, however, is that police administrators and community members are now embracing and encouraging this philosophy of policing.

An important first step towards changing our philosophy of policing is to educate as many individuals as possible about the benefits that community policing has to offer to our department and our community. The more we involve the community as full partners in this process, the more we can insure their cooperation, continuing input and responsibility for its success. It is our belief that by working together to determine ways in which we can improve the quality of police services that our department has to offer, our employees, our community and our County Government will all benefit significantly.

“...this process must focus on effectiveness as well as efficiency, and it must encourage quality over quantity.”

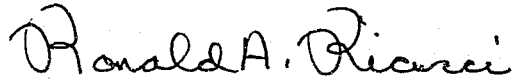

To insure successful implementation of community policing in Montgomery County, we felt that it was important to examine all aspects of our police department. To accomplish this arduous task, in January of 1992, Chief Edwards formed the Community Policing Steering Committee. This committee included sworn officers, civilian employees, representatives from other County departments and private citizens. It was tasked with the responsibility of coordinating the development of a well-structured strategic plan for policing.

In order to carefully craft such a plan, an additional eight working committees and three advisory committees were formed and have been working on the goals and objectives identified by the Steering Committee. This plan outlines and incorporates the diligent and dedicated efforts of the many individuals who participated in the strategic planning process. This committee process has allowed for full participation by employees and citizens alike, which goes to the core of community policing.

This plan is the first step in demonstrating our commitment to improving the quality of police services in Montgomery County. Maintaining that commitment will be the challenge for our elected officials and police leadership. Putting community policing into practice will be the primary challenge for our officers and employees as well as the citizens they serve.

Introduction

We believe that we have established a solid foundation from which we can best address the needs of our Community, our Department and our County Government. Flexibility will be an essential key to the success of this plan. It will require ongoing evaluation and provisions for orderly changes wherever necessary. This strategic transition plan allows us to begin our journey toward full implementation of community policing. On behalf of the many dedicated participants in this planning process, I am pleased to present Montgomery County's vision for policing in the 1990's and into the 21st century.

— Albert Einstein

A New Direction

"An organization is a system, with a logic of its own, and all the weight of tradition and inertia. The deck is stacked in favor of the tried and proven way of doing things and against the taking of risks and striking out in new directions."

— J.D. Rockefeller III

The Montgomery County Department of Police is committed to the smooth transition to and successful implementation of community policing. Our department's commitment formally began in January, 1992, when Chief Edwards issued his "vision" for the department. This vision statement embodied the guiding principles which represented his personal vision for the future of our department.

Chief Edwards believed that for an organization to be successful, its leadership should establish a vision that reflects and illustrates its aims and its values. This vision for the future should provide purpose and meaningful direction for our department in the present. It represents our destiny, our ideals, and the goals for which we should constantly strive.

Vision Statement

The Montgomery County Police will provide the highest quality of police services by working in partnership with the community to improve the quality of life within Montgomery County, while at the same time maintaining respect for individual rights and human dignity. The Department recognizes the value and importance of its employees and will ensure that all employees are treated equitably and fairly. The Department is committed to providing its members with the quality of leadership, training, and equipment necessary to perform its mission.

In order to ensure input from all segments of our community as well as all levels within our department, in January, 1992, Chief Edwards formed the Community Policing Steering Committee. As its first task, this committee, comprised of sworn and non-sworn employees as well as members of the business community, civic associations, and other governmental agencies, rewrote the department's mission statement. It was written with the belief that the department should have a mission which is easily understood, but which clearly defines the purpose and direction of the organization for its members.

Mission Statement

We, the Montgomery County Department of Police, are committed to providing the highest quality of police services by empowering our members and the community to work in partnership with the goal of improving the quality of life within Montgomery County, while at the same time maintaining respect for individual rights and human dignity.

Chief Edwards and the Steering Committee further believed that it was of critical importance to identify values and goals for the department which mirror those of the community it serves. It was their belief that organizational values are necessary to provide guidance and direction to our department and to set standards for appropriate behavior from our employees. The identification of these organizational values represented the first set of formal values in our department's history.

Organizational Values

Partnership:

We are committed to working in partnership with the community and each other to identify and resolve issues which impact public safety.

Respect:

We are committed to respecting individual rights, human dignity, and the value of all members of the community and the department.

Integrity:

We are committed to nurturing the public trust by holding ourselves accountable to the highest standards of professionalism and ethics.

Dedication:

We are committed to providing the highest quality of professional law enforcement service to the community with the goal of enhancing the quality of life within Montgomery County.

Empowerment:

We are committed to empowering our members and the community to resolve problems by creating an environment that encourages solutions that address the needs of the community.

...pride in our community, pride in our department, pride in ourselves

Transition to Community Policing

The next major task facing the Steering Committee was to set goals for the department which were consistent with the philosophy of community policing and which would allow our organization to accomplish its newly defined mission.

The committee identified the goals of empowerment, problem-solving, accountability, partnership, and organizational development to facilitate our transition to community policing.

Specific objectives were determined as necessary to the successful attainment of these goals. Realizing the importance of establishing a platform which would ensure broad based input from both within and outside of our department, eight working committees and three advisory committees were formed. These committees were charged with the responsibility of developing strategies which would be supportive of the transition to community policing and which are responsive to our agency's goals.

In order to provide for an orderly transition process, in March, 1992, Chief Edwards formed the Office of Community Policing as a separate unit within the police department assigned to the Chief's office. This office has been the focal point for coordinating the activities of the various committees on which our employees and citizens serve and is responsible for the overall organization of our department's planning, implementation, and evaluation efforts.

Believing that the initial foundation had been laid, the next phase of the implementation process was to educate our employees and citizens about the promising aspects of community policing and to encourage their active participation. Advertisements were published in local newspapers, community forums were conducted in each of our police districts and open forums were conducted on a monthly basis for our employees. Eventually, over 250 committee members became actively involved in the community policing planning process in July, 1992, when the eight work committees were formed to begin the strategic planning process. Later, three additional advisory committees were formed to address specific issues which became evident during the process.

While this planning process was underway, the staff of the Office of Community Policing began conducting training for supervisors and field training officers on the community policing philosophy and problem oriented policing strategies. Briefings describing the department's efforts were also provided to every unit and shift within the department. In February, 1993, Chief Edwards hosted a three day retreat for the entire executive staff at which he outlined his vision for the future of our department and our transition to community policing.

Transition to Community Policing

Since that time, a considerable amount of time and creative energy has been devoted to our plan for policing in the future. Our mission has been translated into goals and objectives, and specific strategies have been identified to allow us to achieve and fulfill these aims. This entire process has now been recorded in the department's strategic plan so that others may understand and follow it.

This process merely indicates the direction we believe our department should take at this time. In order to get there, our department's leadership must demonstrate their commitment to these aims by encouraging innovation, creativity, and initiative from our employees. Our leaders must enthusiastically communicate the department's vision and goals so that our members will follow with equal enthusiasm.

It is also important to remember that the strategies recommended in this plan must be carefully and constantly evaluated to ensure that our goals and objectives are being met. Adaptability is the capacity for an organization to anticipate change and to restructure itself to be better able to provide the services needed as a result of change. As we begin our community policing implementation process, we must structure our organization so that it is able to not only anticipate changes in our society, but so that it also welcomes the challenges and opportunities that change provides. In order to implement our philosophical change in policing, we have identified five major goals and supportive objectives which we believe will be the cornerstone of quality policing in Montgomery County as we head into the 21st century.

In an effort to pursue and demonstrate the highest levels of law enforcement standards and professionalism within our department, we are currently undergoing an evaluation by the Commission on Accreditation for Law Enforcement Agencies (CALEA). The Montgomery County Police Department is seeking to attain accreditation when the commission holds its next meeting in July, 1993. In order to assist in this accreditation process, we have cited specific CALEA standards, wherever applicable, after the recommended strategies.

Goals and Objectives

GOAL 1.0: EMPOWERMENT

Empowerment includes the delegation of the authority and responsibility necessary to identify and resolve those public safety related issues confronting our communities. Empowerment requires that all of the participants in this effort share the responsibility for its success or failure. Empowerment involves not only police employees, but also members of the community and local government.

Community policing recognizes that the community should have input into matters which affect its quality of life. An empowered community shares the responsibility to better itself and can assist the police in defining and prioritizing problem areas and designing and implementing strategies to reduce or eliminate these problems. Through this process a sense of partnership with the police is created and strengthened.

Police employees are empowered to analyze problems and design effective solutions. Most community problems can best be resolved by allowing individual beat officers the flexibility to solve the problem rather than just "clear the call." The resources of the agency must be focused on assisting their officers in problem resolution. In order to be successful, the active support and participation of the local government is essential.

Goals and Objectives

1.0 EMPOWERMENT
The process of delegating to the police and the community the responsibility for prioritizing concerns, decision making and distribution of resources.

Goal

Objectives

1.1
Decentralize department decision making to ensure that this process occurs at the lowest level possible.

1.2
Decentralize, where and when possible, the department in function and structure.

1.3
Increase community involvement in identifying and resolving issues which impact public safety.

1.4
Develop equitable recruiting practices within the department consistent with community characteristics and needs.

1.5
Develop equitable promotional practices and career opportunities within the department consistent with community characteristics and needs.

GOAL 2.0: PROBLEM SOLVING

Community policing emphasizes the need for a problem solving approach to reduce the incidence and the fear of crime. In many instances, it will be more effective and efficient to spend several hours (or even days) to thoroughly address and eliminate a problem than it will be to repeatedly dispatch cars to the same call day after day, week after week, month after month, and in some cases, year after year.

Problem solving requires that officers be allowed to not only try the safe and proven traditional solutions, but also new, imaginative, and even unorthodox solutions. Not all solutions will be successful, as with any solution there is the risk of failure.

Risk taking is a necessity in community policing. Problem solving requires that the department not only accept risk taking but encourage it. Employees should be commended for their successes and not chastised for their failures. A common axiom in community policing is "zero risk equals zero success."

Goals and Objectives

2.0 PROBLEM SOLVING

The analysis of a recurring problem to determine its cause and to devise solutions to permanently eliminate it. Problem solving also includes implementing the chosen solution. Problem solving involves risk taking.

Goal

Objectives

2.1

Reduce fear of crime and conditions that contribute to crime and disorder through community policing strategies.

2.2

Reallocate individual and unit workloads to facilitate innovation and problem solving opportunities.

2.3

Establish a permanent planning unit to support and facilitate current and future departmental planning strategies.

2.4

Identify changes needed to existing laws and ordinances and propose new legislation to facilitate community policing strategies.

GOAL 3.0: ACCOUNTABILITY

All partners in community policing must realize that they share the responsibility for success or failure. The police are accountable for providing the proper organizational framework and support necessary to be successful. Police leadership must not only voice their support, but must demonstrate it by their deeds and actions. An accountable police agency is one that invites both its employees and the community to assist in defining community problems and suggesting and implementing the proper solutions.

Citizens are accountable and have a responsibility for participating in the process. The community must inform the police and elected officials of their priorities and expectations and then hold them accountable for their performance. Community policing cannot be successful without meaningful participation by the community.

Community policing is enhanced when the local government not only supports the philosophy but becomes an active participant in community problem solving. Many problems are beyond the capacity of the police to resolve and require the involvement of other governmental agencies. A committed government can contribute to a significant increase in the quality of life for its citizens.

Goals and Objectives

3.0 ACCOUNTABILITY
The process by which all partners in community policing share the responsibility for its success or failure. The partners include the police leadership, the police officers, the community, and the local government.

Goal

Objectives

3.1
Establish a management structure consistent with the mission of community policing.

3.2
Develop and encourage a management structure of open communications at all levels in the department.

3.3
Develop a personnel appraisal system within the department consistent with the mission of community policing.

3.4
Develop a process whereby the community shares the responsibility for the resolution of problems within their community.

GOAL 4.0: PARTNERSHIP

Community policing is a partnership between the police, the citizens, the business community, and the local government to work together to positively impact the quality of life in our communities. Those participating in this process are tasked with identifying crime related problems, determining their root causes, and then recommending and implementing strategies to permanently reduce or eliminate these problems.

When these partnerships can accomplish this, the benefits of community policing can be significant. The police benefit by having ended a constantly recurring problem. The citizens benefit from an improvement in their quality of life. Individual officers and citizens who participate in the process receive the self satisfaction which results from having addressed a difficult problem and having arrived at a workable solution.

We readily admit that the police, alone, cannot solve all that ails our society. However, by establishing cooperative partnerships, we can make better use of our limited resources while striving to be more responsive to the needs of the community.

Goals and Objectives

4.0 PARTNERSHIP
Community policing is a partnership between the police, other government agencies, the community, and the private sector to work together to define crime related problems, determine their root causes, and then implement solutions which will permanently reduce or eliminate these problems.

Goal

Objectives

4.1
Maximize the coordination, cooperation, and communication with governmental agencies, community service providers, and neighborhood and community groups.

4.2
Recognize and ensure that our diverse cultural, social, and economic communities are active participants within this partnership.

4.3
Develop a process for the identification of alternative service delivery where appropriate.

4.4
Establish adaptable strategies for responding to community concerns.

GOAL 5.0: ORGANIZATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

One of the most important elements essential to the successful implementation of community policing is that of organizational development. The organization's leadership must establish a climate where open communication, creative thought and risk taking are encouraged and rewarded. Every aspect of the organization should be examined and evaluated to ensure that it is in tune with the philosophy being embraced.

All members of the organization should be encouraged to participate in this process of self examination. The entire structure of the organization should be measured against its goals and objectives. Strategies should be recommended and implemented and they should be constantly evaluated to determine their effectiveness. Wherever necessary, they should be refined or improved.

Most importantly, for community policing to be a long term success, this process must be continual. As times and trends change, so must the organization. We must position ourselves to anticipate change while at the same time establish a built-in philosophy of adaptability for our department.

Goals and Objectives

5.0 ORGANIZATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

The departmental process of self-examination, planning, evolution and reevaluation designed to create an organization dedicated to the successful implementation and maintenance of community policing.

Goal

Objectives

5.1

Develop a leadership and command philosophy conducive to and supportive of all goals and objectives of the organization.

5.2

Define the organizational structure necessary for implementing community policing.

5.3

Identify and provide training for all personnel and the community to enable them to understand, implement and adapt to community policing.

5.4

Develop an environment where creativity, innovative thought, risk taking and communication are encouraged and rewarded, so as to improve the quality of work life for all employees.

5.5

Allow members greater participation in developing policies and procedures which will affect them in their work.

TECHNOLOGY DEVELOPMENT

OBJECTIVE 1: IDENTIFY CURRENT AND EMERGING EQUIPMENT AND TECHNOLOGICAL NEEDS OF THE DEPARTMENT'S VARIOUS FUNCTIONAL ENTITIES.

Technology Development Committee Objective

The use of modern equipment and technology is paramount to the successful delivery of services in any organization. In order to ensure a thorough and complete review of the equipment and technology utilized by the members of our department, the Technology Development Committee was established. The Technology Development Committee was responsible for the identification, evaluation, and recommendation of equipment and technology that would enhance the ability of the department to implement community policing, improve the delivery of current services to the community, and enhance the safety of police personnel. The following section outlines this committee's objectives and strategies for technology development.

What Does The Future Hold?

"There are no problems we cannot solve together, and very few that we can solve by ourselves."

— Lyndon Baines Johnson

The true measurement of success in any police department can best be determined at the level of service delivery. Even the best of plans are of little value if they are not properly implemented and evaluated. The development of our strategic plan is only the first step on our journey to full implementation of community policing.

We now have a plan for policing which outlines specific strategies to allow us to reach our department's goals and objectives. This strategic plan was developed through the collective efforts of many individuals from all levels of our department and our community and it truly represents the framework which we have identified as necessary for quality policing. It is now incumbent upon each of us to put forth our very best efforts when implementing these strategies. After all, quality policing really begins and ends with the efforts of each individual.

As we begin implementing the strategies outlined in this plan, the various community policing committees will continue to work in their respective areas of assignment. Our aim is to measure and evaluate the success of these strategies relative to the attainment of our goals and to recommend any changes deemed necessary. We have conducted an internal evaluation of our efforts during this past year which was based on responses from those who served on the various committees. We plan to develop and conduct an annual external survey for the community to measure their perceptions about the quality of police services provided and the success of our implementation efforts.

A Final Thought

Up to this point, we have outlined the written formula required for the implementation of community policing. However, it will not be enough without the committed efforts of everyone involved. As individuals, we must take the initiative and make community policing a reality, rather than wait for someone else to lead the way. We must learn to police "smarter" by utilizing all of the resources available to us in the community. We must constantly strive to form cooperative partnerships with community members so that we can enhance our ability to resolve crime related problems.

For those among our ranks who may still be skeptical, we challenge you to get involved. See for yourselves the endless potential for affecting positive changes within our department and in the way we perform our jobs. Community policing is not soft on crime, nor does it inhibit to embrace and reflect a new attitude."

our ability to arrest those who break the laws. In many cases, community policing is tougher on crime and criminals because we are working with the added benefits of the community's resources, criminal intelligence, and support.

In law enforcement circles, community policing is viewed as a philosophy. It involves an acknowledgement of shared responsibility with the community, and it reflects our attitudes about the way we conduct the business of policing. Now is the time for us to embrace and reflect a new attitude. We have accomplished a great deal thus far, but there is yet much to be done. We call upon every citizen, every political leader, and every police employee to make a personal commitment to the success of community policing in Montgomery County.

SPECIAL ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Cover Design: Created by Bonnie Golian from a theme envisioned by Officer Rosemarie Borisow.

The Montgomery County Police Department and the Office of Community Policing would like to extend a special acknowledgement and our sincere appreciation to those who first pioneered our community policing efforts. Their labors and dedication to this endeavor laid the foundation upon which we were able to build and enrich.

Finally, a great deal of time and energy went into the publication of this document. Many people contributed their valuable time, insight, expertise, and opinions which formed the basis for the content of this strategic plan. The next step was to take that information and organize it in a professional and easy to read manner. For that, a final expression of sincere appreciation is owed to Sergeant Bill O'Toole for his editorial assistance and to Office Services Manager Bonnie Golian for her creativity, tireless efforts, and generous commitment of time for the production, design, and layout of this publication.
