INTRODUCTION

Arizona has 69 city and county jails ranging in age from under one year to over 70 years, and in capacity from one inmate to 600 inmates. Arizona jails are found in locations as varied as Phoenix (population 680,000) and Fredonia (population 1,200). On September 30, 1977, Arizona jails held 2,365 inmates.

This report contains the major findings of a jail survey conducted in September of 1977 by the Statistical Analysis Center of the Arizona State Justice Planning Agency. As defined for this study, a jail is an area of confinement intended for adults, which is under the control of a county sheriff or a city police chief. Such questions as the age and capacity of facilities, the number and type of inmates, and the number of jail employees were asked of each local jail in the state. Juvenile detention centers and jails located on military bases, Indian reservations, and national parks were not included in the jail survey.

This report has four sections. The first section is a summary of data on jail facilities. The second section summarizes data on inmate characteristics. Data on jail employees are presented in the third section. The final section is a listing by county of data on jail facilities and inmates.

JAIL FACILITIES

Each of the state's fourteen counties maintains at least one jail in its county seat, and nine counties also maintain substation jails in outlying communities. In addition, many cities and towns have jails, although the number of municipal jails has decreased in recent years.

NUMBER OF JAILS

Arizona has 69 city and county jails: 27 city jails, 14 county jails, 3 county jail annexes, and 25 substation jails. The number of city jails is down more than 30 percent from the number identified in a 1970 jail survey conducted by the Arizona State Justice Planning Agency (ASJPA). This decrease is due primarily to the closing of many city jails in favor of the joint use of county facilities.

CHANGE IN THE NUMBER OF ARIZONA JAILS
1970 and 1977

AGE OF JAILS

Twenty-three of Arizona's 69 jails are less than 10 years old. In contrast, 10 jails have been in operation for 40 or more years. On the average, county jails and jail annexes are considerably older than city jails and substation jails. The average age of county jails and jail annexes is 27 years, compared to an average age of 19 years for city jails and 13 years for substation jails.

Perhaps because of their age, seven county jails and two jail annexes have been extensively renovated in recent years. In addition, five other jails in the state have been renovated since their construction.

CAPACITY

Arizona jails have a combined capacity of 3,747 inmates, a decrease of 2 percent in the number determined in the 1970 ASJPA jail survey. On the average, county jails and jail annexes are much larger than city jails and substation jails. County jails and jail annexes have an average capacity of 166 inmates while city jails and substation jails average 25 and 11 inmates, respectively.

During the month of September, 1977, the highest daily statewide jail population was 3,184 inmates, or 85 percent of capacity, while the lowest daily jail population was 2,074 inmates, or 55 percent of capacity. On September 30, 1977, the overall rate of occupancy in Arizona jails was 63 percent. County jails had the highest rate of occupancy (90 percent). The three county jail annexes had an occupancy rate of 54 percent while city jails and substation jails both had rates of occupancy below 30 percent.

OVERCROWDING

Across Arizona, five jails were holding more inmates on the last day of September than they were designed to hold. During the month, four additional jails were over capacity on their days of peak population. It is important to note that the data presented on capacity and inmates refer only to each jail as a whole. Thus, although a given jail may be housing fewer inmates than it was designed to hold, it is possible for that jail to be overcrowded in certain quarters.

INMATES

Local jails are the intake points of the entire criminal justice system. City and county jails are used both as detention centers for adults facing criminal charges and, along with state prisons, as correctional facilities for those serving sentences. Confinement in a local jail may range from a few hours prior to initial court appearance or transportation to another facility, up to one year if sentenced.

Jails in Arizona confined 2,365 inmates on September 30, 1977. Ninety percent of the inmates (2,139) were held in county jails and jail annexes. City jails held 171 inmates or 7 percent of the total, and substation jails held 55 inmates, or 2 percent.

Males predominated overwhelmingly in the jail population, accounting for 9 out of 10 inmates. One-half of the inmates were between the ages of 18 and 24 years. Whites made up 50 percent of the inmate population compared to 72 percent of the total Arizona population. In contrast, Blacks, Mexican Americans, and American Indians were overrepresented in the jail population. One in every twenty inmates was a citizen of Mexico. Approximately 90 percent of these Mexican citizens were incarcerated in the four counties which border Mexico.

GEOGRAPHIC DISTRIBUTION

Maricopa County and Pima County which together account for 75 percent of the state population, held 71 percent of the jail inmates on September 30, 1977. Santa Cruz County ranked first in the number of inmates per 1,000 population (1.9). Coconino County, Gila County, and Yuma County followed, all with 1.6 inmates per 1,000 population.

LEGAL STATUS

Just over half of the inmates in jail on September 30, 1977, had not been convicted — 10 percent were awaiting arraignment and 41 percent had been arraigned and were awaiting trial. Sentenced inmates comprised approximately one-third of the inmate population. Another 2 percent had been convicted but were awaiting further legal action such as sentencing or appeal. Fourteen percent of the jail population fell into the category "Waiting Transfer" which includes persons awaiting transfer to prison and persons being held for federal or other authorities.

CUSTODY

Roughly two-thirds of the inmates confined on the last day of September were held in maximum custody. A working definition of maximum custody is a type of confinement which requires constant supervision of inmates by jail staff. This type of custody is characterized by very tight security, limited movement, and absolute control.

Fifteen percent of the inmates were held in medium custody. Although still within a tight security environment, medium custody requires a lesser degree of supervision than maximum custody. Medium custody allows the inmate to move within the secured areas of the jail without constant or direct supervision.

The remaining eighteen percent of the jail inmates were in minimum custody, the type of confinement usually given to "trusties". Minimum custody allows the inmate a margin of freedom to work with intermittent supervision, both inside and outside the jail facility.

JAIL EMPLOYEES

Arizona jails employ more than 750 persons. Seventy-eight percent of these employees are jail officers while the remainder are engaged in other functions such as administration, food service, and maintenance.

STAFFING

Of the 759 jail employees, 14 percent work on a part-time basis. The great majority of these part-time employees (91 out of 106) are reported by city police departments, many of which utilize patrolmen, radio dispatchers, and clerical staff in the operation of their jails. With both full-time and part-time staff support, all of the county jails and jail annexes, 78 percent of the city jails, and 30 percent of the substation jails are attended 24 hours per day, 7 days per week.

Yuma	24	24	0	4.6
TOTAL	759	653	106	3.1

*Includes both full-time and part-time employees.

On September 30, 1977, the ratio of inmates to Arizona jail employees, both full-time and part-time, was 3.1 to 1. Among the counties, the ratio varied widely. In one county the number of jail employees exceeded the number of inmates, while in another the ratio of inmates to employees was more than 8 to 1. It is important to note that these figures reflect the total number of jail employees. Thus, for many facilities, the ratio of inmates to employees on any one shift is considerably higher than indicated in Table 6.
