A directory of current U.S. child abuse/neglect programs. Arrangement is by state; indexing by agency, profession, and program type.

VI. PEOPLE

If approached properly and in ways that do not demand too much of their professional time, people in many fields (e.g. law, medicine, social welfare, and mental health) who are professionally involved in the problem of child abuse and neglect will often be pleased to share their experience and knowledge with you. In addition to the mandated child protection agency in your area, people who are willing to talk to you or your group might come from local schools or universities, hospitals, parents' anonymous groups, law enforcement agencies, or mental health associations. In some localities Child Abuse and Neglect coordinating groups have been formed and these groups are excellent sources of reliable information.

VII. LEGISLATION AND STATISTICS

- A. Legislation varies from state to state. Current federal legislation should be available for examination at your local library. Information about current or pending legislation should be available from state offices of public welfare, from legislative reference bureaus, from your representatives or from such organizations as the League of Women Voters or the Urban League.
- B. Statistical. The demography of the incidence of child abuse and neglect has been and is now subject to limitations in its accuracy due to differences in reporting legislation, failures to report, over-reporting for certain populations, and other factors. Estimates of the actual incidence vary widely and reported cases may not reflect the actual incidence.
 - 1. Information of national statistics should be obtained either from: NCCAN Clearinghouse, P.O. Box 1182, Washington D.C. 20013 (202) 293-2608 or American Humane Association, Children's Division, P.O. Box 1266, Denver, Colorado 80210. (303) 771-1300.

VIII. RELATION OF CHILD ABUSE AND NEGLECT TO OTHER ISSUES.

Child Abuse and Neglect is not an isolated phenomenon. It generally occurs in conjunction with other family or personal problems such as family stresses, alcoholism, or other manifestations of violence. Societal factors, such as a general condoning of a violent way of life, or societal failure to provide the minimum economic conditions for a family to survive, often contribute to the problem. These factors should be kept in mind both in obtaining and assessing information.

IX. WHAT CAN BE DONE?

A guide to what you as a professional or lay person can do to combat the problem and prevent its occurence is A Pocket Guide to Helping Prevent CAN in Your Community.
