The National Criminal Justice Reference Service (NCJRS) is an international clearinghouse of information on law enforcement and criminal justice sponsored by the National Institute of Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice, the research center of the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration. The Institute was established by Congress in the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 and among its responsibilities of research, development, and evaluation is one to maintain a clearinghouse for the exchange of information about law enforcement and criminal justice. This clearinghouse—NCJRS—collects relevant documents from sources all over the world and maintains a computerized data base of approximately 40,000 documents about police, courts, prosecutors, public defenders, corrections, juvenile justice, and human resource development. By collecting and disseminating this information, NCJRS contributes to the goal of improving law enforcement and criminal justice.

NCJRS is operated and administered by Aspen Systems Corporation for the National Institute of Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice under contract number J-LEAA-023-77 with the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, U.S. Department of Justice.

INTRODUCTION

Since the 18th century English-speaking peoples have depended on periodical publications for disseminating and reading timely ideas and information. Criminal justice interests are represented in the early periodical publications by three serials dedicated to law enforcement, criminal courts, and penology. First and foremost of these titles is Fielding's Quarterly Pursuit of Criminals. First published out of Bow Street in 1773 at Fielding's own expense, the Quarterly was disseminated to magistrates throughout southern England. Its pages contained the most current (by late 18th century standards) commentary and news briefs on crime and criminals. Acclaim was so widespread for the periodical that the Crown relieved Fielding of responsibility for its funding. Under State sponsorship the periodical continued to serve the information interests of the English magistracy under the publication title Police Gazette. Likewise, the periodical Green Bag was a 19th century Boston-based serial dedicated exclusively to criminal jurisprudence and the administration of justice in America's criminal courts. Finally, in mid-19th century Philadelphia the Journal of Prison Discipline and Philanthropy served the reading public whose interests ran to penological themes. Today, periodical publications remain the most frequently utilized means for disseminating current information, ideas, and research findings in criminal justice.

Criminal Justice Periodicals has been developed as a resource document for criminal justice academicians, students, and practitioners. Because it identifies current serial criminal justice publications, librarians seeking to expand their criminal justice collections will also find it helpful. This bibliography is not exhaustive of the titles in the field, but catalogs serial publications most directly accessible and useful to consumers of criminal justice information. The periodicals have been selected because they (1) are currently being received by the National Criminal Justice Reference Service, (2) have been identified in other lists and reference documents (e.g., Union List of Serials), or (3) have been recommended by subject specialists in the field. University law reviews have, for the most part, been excluded because their contents are encompassed by other periodical indexes and their general availability is often limited. Finally, the selection is limited to serial publications which are either published solely in English, or are bilingual.

The selections are organized into eight thematic areas: Corrections and Penology, Courts, Criminal Justice System, Criminal Law, Criminology, Forensics, Juvenile Justice, and Law Enforcement. Publication titles are entered alphabetically in each section. In addition to an abstract describing the general thrust, content, and intended audience of each publication title, the following information is also supplied when available:

- ISSN Number: As part of the International Standard Bibliographic Description, the International Standard Serial Number (ISSN) provides a unique numerical identification for each periodical published in the United States and abroad. Developed for the purpose of promoting the international exchange of information, the ISSN Number is useful for ordering publications.
- Frequency of publication is supplied for each title.
- Founding date and former title: The date when the serial publication began is given for each entry. In cases where a current periodical has been published under another title, the founding date is supplied for each title.
- Price: The current subscription price is supplied when available, however prices are subject to rapid change.
- Subscription address appears for each entry.
- Indexing Services: This notation supplies the titles of indexing and abstracting services in which the articles from each serial publication can be found. Periodical indexes may be found in any academic library and, in some cases, in public libraries. A list of the abbreviations used to indicate the indexing services follows this introduction.
- Sponsor information is provided when a private organization publishes, funds, or otherwise endorses a periodical.

To facilitate use of this directory, three indexes have been included: a subject index, an index to sponsors for ease in identifying periodicals when the exact titles are not known, and an index to periodicals by the country of publication.
