Introduction

Introduction

Crime is a major concern for the citizens of the Atlanta Region. It affects the lives of each and every person within the seven-county area. Some people become victims of crime or see loved ones fall victim to crime. Others live in fear of crime and change their life-styles and activities because of this fear. Everyone pays for crime -- through higher taxes to pay for law enforcement, through higher prices because of shoplifting and expensive security precautions, or through their own personal investment in security devices.

The Atlanta Regional Commission's Crime Analysis for the Atlanta Region covers data reported for calendar year 1978. The Crime Analysis Report only examines Part I offenses or "Index Crimes" which consist of homicide, forcible rape, robbery, aggravated assault (violent crimes), and burglary, larceny, and motor vehicle theft (property crimes) in the seven jurisdictions: Clayton, Cobb, DeKalb, Douglas, Fulton, Gwinnett, and Rockdale County. This analysis has two goals. The first is to keep citizens informed and aware of the extent of crime in the region and in their community. The second is to provide information to criminal justice officials for planning purposes.

The information for this report was derived from three sources. The crime information was obtained by means of a survey form sent out to all of the 49 Atlanta Region law enforcement agencies. The questionnaire requested information on Part I offenses concerning the number of offenses committed and those cleared by arrest. It must be remembered that reported crimes are only a sample of the actual crime picture. There may be as much as 50 percent of all crimes which go unreported every year.

The population figures were extracted from the 1978 Population and Housing report of the Atlanta Regional Commission. The labor force information came from the 1978 Civilian Labor Force Estimates prepared by the Georgia Department of Labor.

This is a purely descriptive analysis. It is not an attempt to evaluate the effectiveness of any law enforcement agency nor is it an attempt to identify the cause of crime in a given area. The population and employment figures are used to provide the reader with a partial demographic profile of each area. They are not used as correlates of crime in a given area. There are many social and economic factors which contribute to the impact of the crime problem.

Population size and density.

Population composition by age, sex, and race.

Population stability including the numbers of visitors and commuters.

Population composition as to education levels.

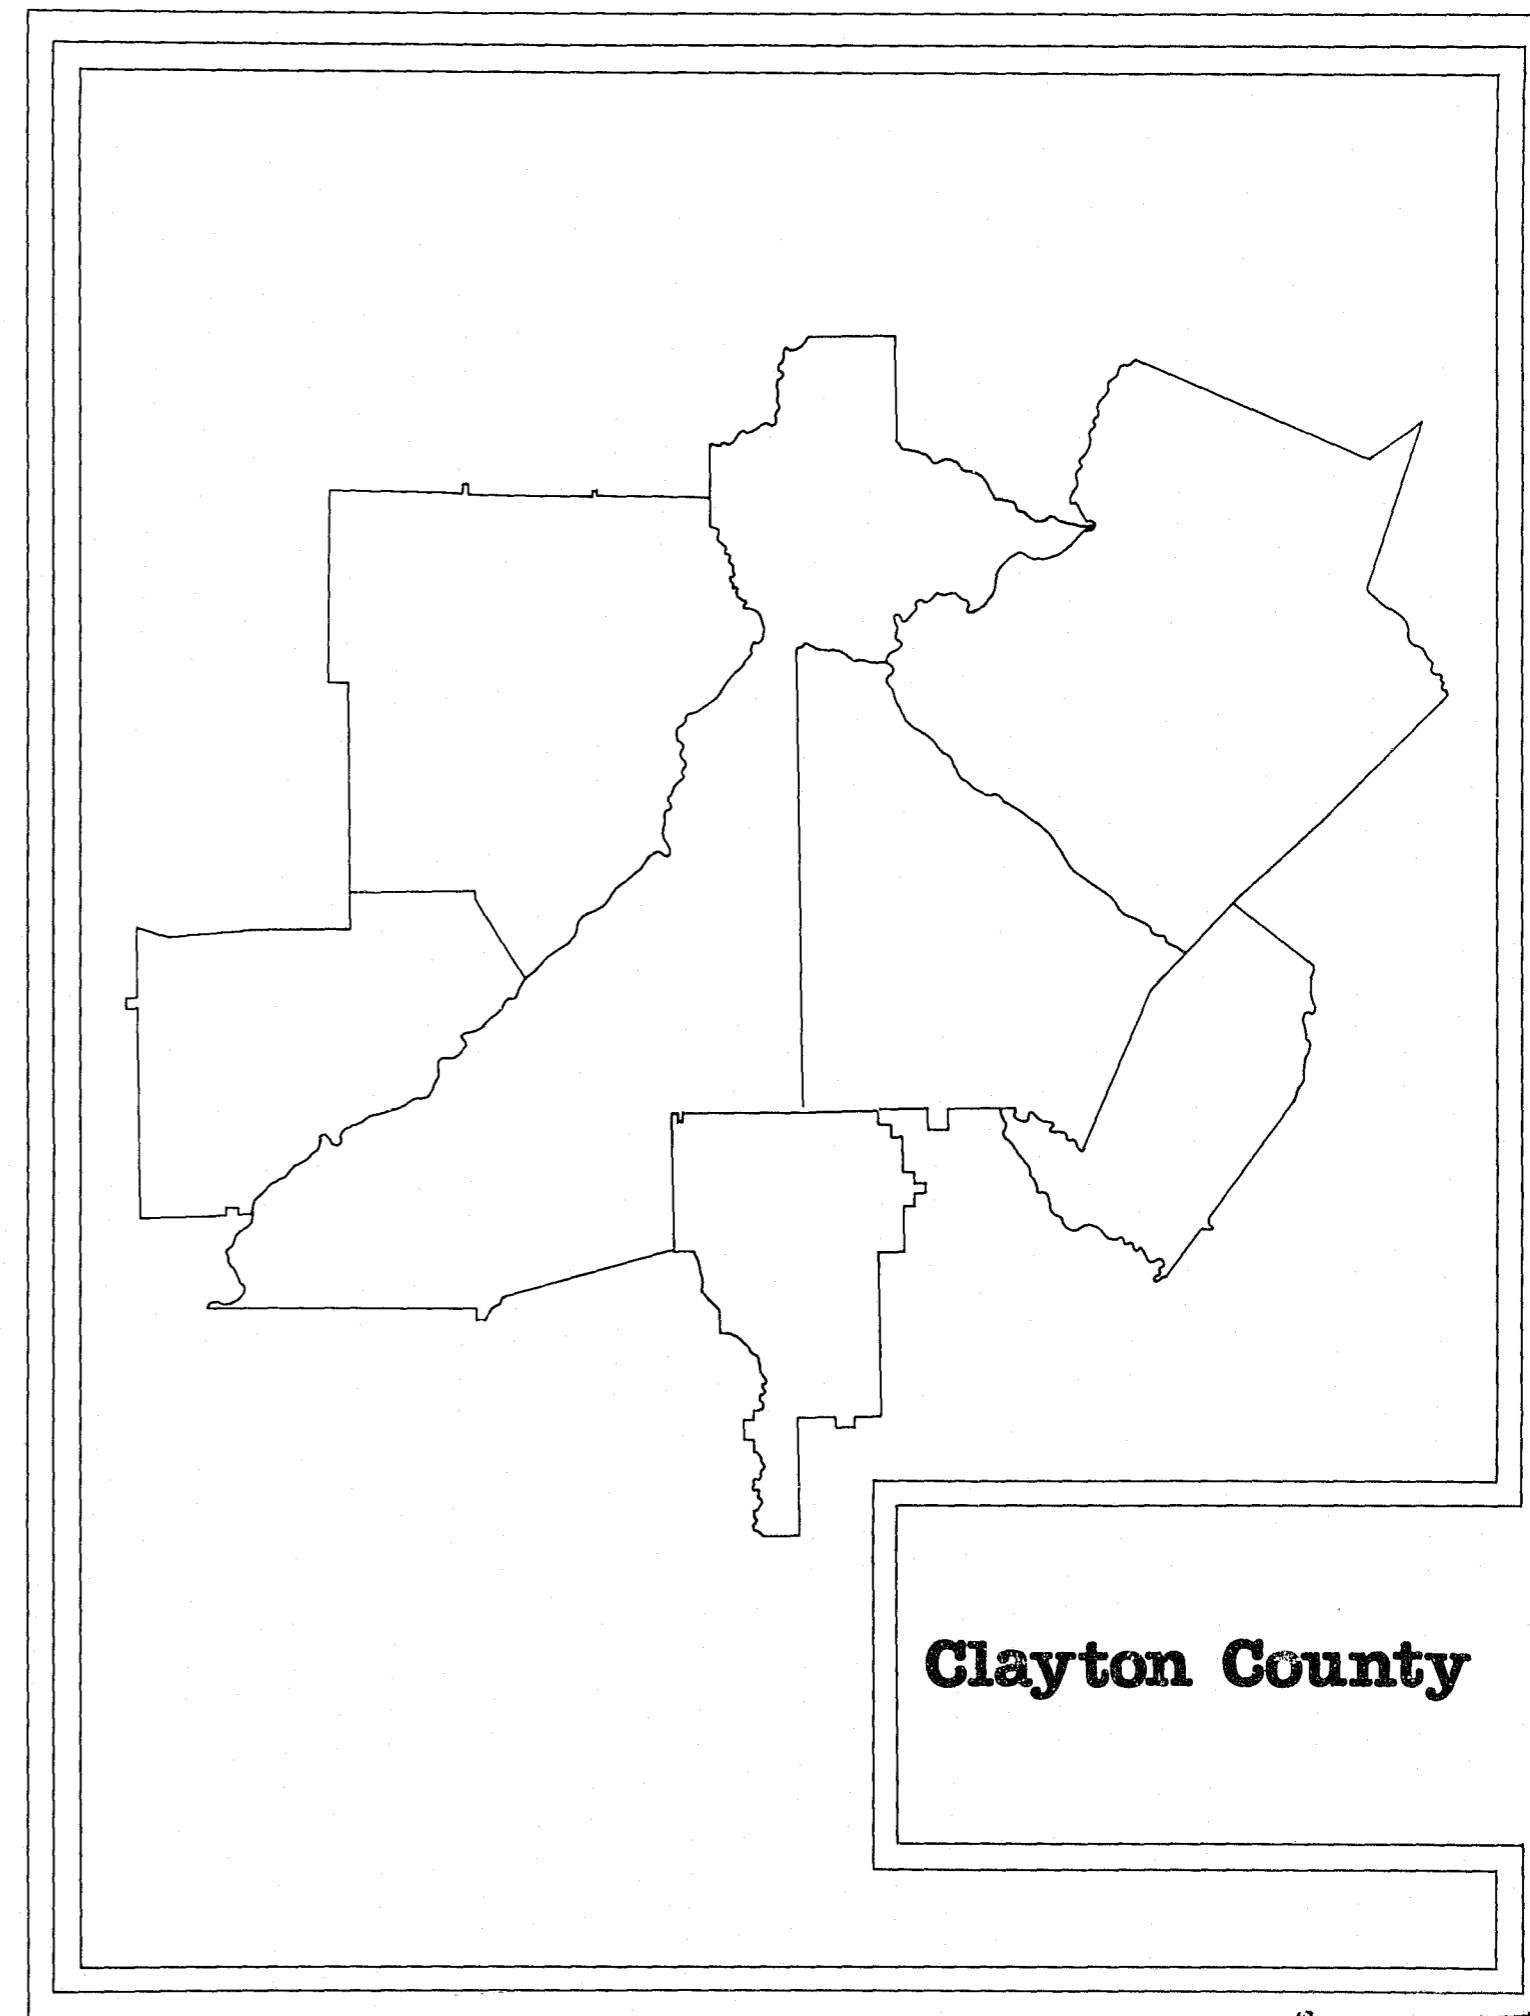

Opportunities within the community for recreation at differing economic and social levels.

Relationship of the local law enforcement agency with its community and the resultant attitudes of the citizenry.

Crime prevention efforts by the police and citizenry.

Policies and procedures of local prosecutors, judges and correctional managers.

However, these factors will not be dealt with in this report. A detailed breakdown of crimes for each jurisdiction is contained at the end of this report.
